There are pro-lifers who personally would never have abortions themselves but believe others should have access to abortion if they want to make this choice. Their position is basically indistinguishable from those who feel less guilty identifying as "personally pro-choicers" Babies still end up dead. This stance is the equivalent of being "personally against slavery" or "personally against child abuse." As such, we all have a moral obligation to be publicly pro-life—to say abortion is wrong, not just for me, but for everyone.
